

If I do not wish to be annoyed by telemarketers, and my state has provided a way for me to enjoy that right, why should my rights be less than a solicitor? If businesses put up signs on their doors "No Soliciting" and that right is upheld, why should the Do Not Call law to protect individuals be any less enforceable? I do not want people calling my house at any time of the day or night to sell me "insurance" or "phone service" that is unwanted. Can't I make the decision to call a company when I want or need a service? If NJ laws are too strong for the Federal Govt, maybe that's a good thing.
